CANTON NOTES.

(From Our Own Correspondent THE CHINESE NEW YEAR. CANTON, February 19.

The twenty-seventh year of Kwang-Hai has, as far as Canton is concerned, opence more anspiciously than last year. Then, was ramoured that an attempt would made to murder the mandaring when they assembled to worship the Imperial Tablet. That report was discredited at the time, not because of any ovidence, but simply on the ground of improbability. Looking back on the events of the year, it is now pretty safe to say that the rumour was not altogether a baseless one, for it indicated the wish if not the power of a certain class of men, who were not known at that time to be in this city. Just now, Canton is singularly free from rumours of every kind. Last year, Li Hung-Chang was excused, at least dis not appear, when the ceremony of doing obeisance to the Emperor was performed. His successor T'o Mo, who is probably an older man, did not fail to put in an appearance this morning. As he did not arrive till after six o'clock his brother mandarins

GOOD TEMPLARS IN HONGKONG.

At the usual weekly sossion of The Red Dragon Lodge, No. M. 65, of the Independent Order of Good Templars, held in the Soldiers and Sailors' Home on Tuesday evening last, the three following resolutions were adopted (1) That this meeting recognises the fact that this Jubilee year of the Good Templar Order fieds it the greatest Temperance organisation in this country and in the world, numbering as 'it does more than eleven thousand branches located in one hundred different countries and States: and having an increasing membership of 100,000 Adult and Junior members within its 2,100 Lodges and Tomples in England

(2). That we rejoice that since the Order originated in New York State fifty yours ago it has promulgated temperance teaching at hundreds of thousands of public meetings; that it has administered its Total Abstinence pledge to many millions persons (about 1,500,000 being thus pledged by it in England alone during the past 32 years); that it has circulated scores of millions of pages of temperance literature-and now publishes over fifty magazines and newspapers in various languages; and that it has reclaimed tens of thousands from intensperance, and prevented hundreds of thousands from ever giving way to drinking habits. (3). That inasmuch as the Order has also by its discipline and educative inthe globe with a beneficent girdle of sobriety and fratornity; we reverently thank Almighty God for the successes thus vouchsafed to us, and while dedicating ourselves onew to this great work, invite all friends of humanity to join with us in our

There was a soul-stirring spectacle

Cowos and through the Solent: Scores of thousands of people lined the point of vantage along the course of the funeral ship. After the Bishop of Winchester had concluded a special service in the chapel, the coffin was borne to the gun-carriage, which was drawn by six dark bay horses. The pall was made of white silk, edged with gold lace and embroidered with the Royal Arms ab the corners, while the drooping Royal Standard behind the carriage was partially draped. At the head of the cotting was a cushion on which by the great State Crown, flashing with dimmonds. A cushion at the foot bore the Scoptre and two Orbs. King Edward and other members of the Royal family followed directly after the coffin, ahead of which the Queen's Pipers wailed the funeral dirgo, and the church bells rang a knoll. The procession sadly wended its way to Cowes from Osborne House. At Cowes the coffin was placed on board the Royal Ynoht Alberta; and then, amid the firing of minute guns, the majestic and splendid naval pageant moved on towards Portsmouth, on nearing which place the fleet e ased firing minute gans; but this was taken up and continued by ships in harbour

At 8 o'cleck next morning, after a short service, the coffin was carried schore to the train amid the firing of minute guns, and muffled peals from the bells. The funeral march took place while torrents of min fell and a heavy wind prevailed.

The coffin was placed in a draped saloou railway carriage, and the tmin reached Victoria Station, Windsor, without incident, steaming into the station amid a solome hush, all heads being uncovered. The morning was cold and gloomy though rain-

Until the procession was over, from carliest dawn all the streets leading along the line of route were filled with enormous but silent crowds of people, even the poor-cal among them wearing mourning Behind the coffin was carried the Royal Standard; then the King riding, pale and careworn in appearance, next come; with the Kaiser, the Duke of Connaught, and over forty royal princes on horseback, followed by many others: Every head was whoovered as the coffin passed, and the only sound was the mournful funeral march, with the distant booming of minute guns, till Paddington was reached. At Windsor the coffin was borne to the awaiting gun-carringe, which was drawn by eight artillory horses. Then an unpleasant | STEAMERS PASSED SUEZ CANAL. episode occurred. The horses had suffered from long waiting in the cold, and when all was ready refused to start. The drivers. were afraid to coerce them lest they should everturn the coffin and regalia. The King of Connaught is to succeed King Edward as became terribly distressed, but the Nava Guard of Honour came to the rescue, and utilising the traces of the refractory horses. as ropes, after a quarter of an hour's delay slowly drew the carriage to St. George's

Proclaiming the King.

London, Jan. 25.—The Deputy-Garter King at Arms read from the balcony of St. James's Palace, the proclamation announce ing the accession of King Edward VII Amongst those present were Lord Roberts, Commander in Chief of the British E24 Army, and the great officers of State.

The proclamation was followed by a fanfare of trampets, and the playing of the National Anthem by the band of the Foot Guards. The proclamation was received with great cheering. A red cordon stretched across the Strand symbolised Temple Bar, where the Lord Mayor and Corporation awaited the procession, headed by the Duke of Norfolk, the Earl Marshal. A pursuivant obtained from the Lord Mayor formal permission to enter the city. At the end of Chancery. lane the trumpeters played a fanfare.

A Herald in a righ tabard read the proclamation announcing the succession of the King. The crowds cheered. The process sion then proceeded to the steps of the Royal Exchange, where an immense concourse of city, men cheered the King. From the baleany of the Mansion House the Lord Mayor invited the crowd to sing the National Anthem. There was an immediate response followed by tumultuous

The Lord Mayor proyided refreshments to the heralds and the officials. A royal salute of 101 guns was fired at Aldershot. The warships were dressed. Royal salutes were fired in many places. The King was proclaimed at Winchester, Dublin, and other cities.
